Field of the Invention The present invention relates generally to a method and apparatus for processing records in a database system. More particularly, the present invention provides a method and apparatus for organizing records stored in a database in one or more categories. 2. Description of the Related Art Digital data management systems such as database systems are commonly used to store information. A database system typically comprises a database management system (DBMS) or other database management software and an underlying database or database system. A database system often includes a database, a table space, and an index space. Data is stored in the database and table spaces and is accessed by using indexes. Data in databases are typically organized according to one or more categories. For example, a database might be organized by the years in which payment was made to a company and the type of payments made (i.e., cash, check, or credit card). The categories may also be used to further categorize records, such as by dividing records into groups of records, that are closely related, more loosely related, or unrelated to a category. Many database systems are designed to provide a variety of different views of the data based on a user's requests. For example, a database user can find information by using indices organized by a data category to rapidly access data associated with a data category. The indices are also used to support a variety of user access and modification requests. Indices can also be used to determine whether a particular record exists and if a particular record is part of a particular category. In order to perform these functions, the data in a database are organized in 6d1f23a050
