Embodiments of the present invention relate to a vehicle suspension system, more particularly, to a vehicle suspension system with anti-sway control system (ASCS). In general, the vehicle suspension system is a system of minimizing the sway or rolling of the vehicle in order to ensure safety in driving. In a conventional vehicle suspension system, a shock absorber is provided between a suspension device and a chassis to cushion a motion of the vehicle body due to the ride quality. A suspension device is an assembly of suspension members, such as a shock absorber, a spring and a strut bar. A strut bar is a member connecting a lower side of a shock absorber and a vehicle body. The strut bar absorbs a motion of the vehicle body generated by a wheel to thereby make the motion of the vehicle body smooth. The strut bar disposed below the shock absorber is integrated with the shock absorber together with a suspension member and a lower side support. Therefore, a shape and a performance of a shock absorber, a spring, a strut bar and the like are designed to maintain the characteristics of the suspension device in an integrated form. The strut bar needs to connect the shock absorber and the vehicle body. When the vehicle wheels are severely inclined during turning or driving on a rugged road surface, the vehicle body tends to sway considerably. The sway of the 3e33713323
