To select a layer, use the Layers panel tab and click the layer thumbnail or press Ctrl+J (Windows) or Shift+⌘-J (Mac OS) on the selected area. Creating a new work In Photoshop, you create a new image by using the New dialog box and then using the Image Editor. In this example, I'm creating a new image. You find the dialog box by following these steps: 1. Choose File⇒New. The New dialog box opens. (Refer to Figure 4-1). **Figure 4-1:** The New dialog box enables you to create new files. 2. From the Type drop-down menu, choose the type of file you want to create. 3. From the Size menu, choose the size of the image that you want to create from the Size drop-down menu. For the file type, you can choose any file type, including Photoshop JPEG files, PDF files, GIF files, or even PCX files. For the size, you can choose an image size from the available options. The size options are relatively self-explanatory and include the following: Smaller: Smaller images are generally easier to use on the Web, but the quality is lower than for the other options. Regular: A good compromise between file size and image quality. Large: A large file size with great image quality and the option to save as a contact sheet. If you choose PCX format, you can create a postage stamp-sized file to use as a texture for animation or use in a book. You can also create, resize, or alter existing image files using the command bar at the bottom of the new dialog box. Although you can create any type of file, Adobe recommends the following recommendations for file types: Photoshop and Photoshop Elements PSD files: The native Photoshop file format. They have the most compatibility with other programs. JPEG files: These files have JPEG compression at an 8:1 to 10:1 ratio. They are generally the best image quality but make large files. Although Photoshop adds compression to these files, they do not perform well with small file sizes. You may need to convert or re-create these files to work well with smaller file sizes. The new dialog box is divided into three sections, as shown in Figure 4-2: Type: The

Q: Protected ActivityHandler overrides I'm using the security feature of Android and would like to know if what's happening is some kind of override when a new key is pressed. From this link I understand that if the app receives a new keystroke but they haven't been registered then the framework calls the protected ActivityHandler.
protected void onWindowFocusChanged(boolean hasFocus) { if (hasFocus && isActivityKeyNeeded()) { keyDown(KeyEvent.KEYCODE_DPAD_LEFT); } } From what I understand the framework calls isActivityKeyNeeded() to check if the current activity has been registered to handle the new keystroke. Is this check important? Could it raise alarms about potential security issues? A: @zp007 and @knoldsen are correct. This has to do with how long a window can be blocked before it is considered a dialog, but there is nothing inherently wrong with the way it is implemented. The activity's onWindowFocusChanged is triggered when the window focus changed and whatever key was pressed is echoed out before the window even receives focus (that is to say that if there was any input made the window was forced from focus even though it was initially set on focus). Stephen A. Smith explains why it's crucial that the team fully understand the impact of losing Robyn in the Falcons' win over the Eagles. (1:31) FLOWERY BRANCH, Ga. -- Atlanta Falcons coach Dan Quinn believes Robyn Houghtaling was likely paralyzed from the waist down when her car left the road and crashed into a tree, leading to the death of her fiancé, Laremy Tunsil, who was sitting next to her. Atlanta police said Houghtaling and Tunsil were driving on a northwest Atlanta road Saturday night when they apparently drove off the road and into the tree. Tunsil died at the scene, and Houghtaling was airlifted to the hospital. Quinn said Sunday he has "tried to process" what happened. Tunsil was a senior offensive tackle and a preseason All-American who was considered the favorite to win the Outland Trophy, given to the nation's best interior lineman. The family of Tunsil is not commenting on his death.
