Loss of MafB function promotes cell cycle arrest and DNA damage responses. Maf transcription factors are well-known basic leucine zipper (bZip) transcription factors that play critical roles in immune response and cell fate determination. Here we show that genetic deficiency of the murine MafB gene leads to impaired T-cell development and an increased incidence of immunodeficiency-related lymphoproliferation. Our in vitro studies using mutant MafB expression constructs have shown that MafB deficiency leads to impaired CD4(+) T-cell differentiation and proliferation in response to T-cell receptor signaling in a dose-dependent manner. The T-cell phenotype of MafB deficiency was strikingly different from that of MafA deficiency, which is associated with impaired CD4(+) T-cell function as well as T-cell-mediated immunodeficiency. A hallmark of the MafB-deficient T cells was increased expression of the proapoptotic marker Fas, decreased proliferation upon T-cell receptor signaling, and abnormal expression of cell cycle-related proteins, which was associated with a cell cycle arrest at the G(1)-S phase transition. These findings indicate that MafB is essential for normal T-cell development and function, and that the loss of MafB function triggers G(1)-S cell cycle arrest.
