What are some of the big items that can fail at first and then not fail again? IMO, one of the big things I see that is the cause of many of our leaks at first is that insulation is often compressed and wrapped around the outside of the pipe to prevent moisture from getting to it. This means that you run into the first leak pretty fast, and then you begin patching things back up. They won't fail again until a pipe cap shears off, or someone decides to remodel and put in an air handler and cut it off...Then that pipe will start to fail again! I could be wrong, but that is my experience. If I am, I hope to find out at my next HVAC inspection!
