More... for a more continuous involvement of the biliary tract in some stages of liver regeneration \[@B21\]. The different effects of the two drugs might be explained by the ability of each drug to modify post-hepatectomy liver regeneration. At present the administration of many drugs, mainly non-steroidal anti-inflammatory drugs (NSAIDs), has been shown to suppress liver regeneration after partial hepatectomy \[@B27\]. The suppression is mainly due to the ability of NSAIDs to inhibit the synthesis of prostaglandin E2 \[@B28\] which has a major role in liver regeneration \[@B29\]. Celecoxib has been shown to inhibit prostaglandin E2 synthesis, and to act as an anti-inflammatory agent \[@B30\], so that celecoxib may be expected to have a positive effect on liver regeneration. The suppression of liver regeneration, induced by drugs such as aspirin or celecoxib, may be an explanation for some studies showing that the administration of NSAIDs is associated with a higher rate of HCC recurrence \[@B31\]. A hypothesis formulated by Newton et al. \[@B32\] suggested that some drugs like ind 09e8f5149f
