In particular, the invention relates to high-current trench-type power devices having low leakage currents and improved breakdown voltage. (2) Description of the Related Art Large-current trench-type power devices are known, e.g. as shown in U.S. Pat. No. 7,957,667, which is incorporated herein by reference. Such devices are advantageously fabricated with low-resistivity substrate material, which is capable of providing a highly conductive path in series with the trench channel to the surface of the device. Also, conventional trench-type power devices may be designed with shallow trench isolation, e.g., to permit good thermal conduction and to prevent the flow of leakage current between trenches. However, such shallow trench-type devices do not have a highly conductive substrate, and thus do not have good thermal conductivity. For the foregoing reasons, there is a need for a method for making a high-current trench-type power device having good thermal conductivity, and improved performance. Its president, president for Scotland, and the NFU Scotland chairman all say there is no support for a second poll. Mairi Chisholm said a second referendum would "be a massive shock for the current status quo". Alison Johnstone said it was a "a faff and a bother for farmers". She said people were not willing to return to the system they had in 1975. Mr Davidson said: "We've been campaigning for EU membership for three and a half years and I don't think there's anybody in this country that can honestly say they want to roll back and have all that come out of the European Union. "It's just an unrealistic dream, and nobody in their right mind would ever want to do that." Mr Davidson, who is also president
