Even if appellant had consented to the search of the backpack, he claims, his consent was not given freely and voluntarily. Because of this, the government had the burden of establishing that he had consented to the search of the backpack and camera case “by a preponderance of the evidence.” - 12 - The trial court determined that the government had carried its burden of proof on consent after the government presented the testimony of Officer McCoy. When asked if he saw appellant “choosing” to give consent to search the backpack and camera case, McCoy answered, “No.” However, the trial court found that the officer reasonably and lawfully found a large black container belonging to appellant while conducting a search of the camera case. 1. Field of the Invention This invention relates to a face tracking system for use in an image display system, such as for use in medical diagnostics, in which the display of images of an object being examined is synchronized with the movement of the face of a user with respect to the screen of the display system.

2. Background Information In the field of medical diagnostics, imaging systems are known for use in determining a patient's internal bodily structures. As one example of such an imaging system, the assignee hereof has developed the MRI/MRCP (magnetic resonance imaging and magnetic resonance cholangiopancreatography) system, which is described in U.S. patent application Ser. No. 08/973,139, filed Oct. 2, 1997 and which is incorporated herein by reference. The MRI/MRCP system generates two-dimensional (2D) and three-dimensional (3D) images of internal bodily structures, such as the pancreas, bile ducts, kidneys, liver, gallbladder, and other pancreatic, liver, biliary, and ureteral structures. For example, the imaging system enables images of the entire pancreas to be generated in the same session. The 2D images enable the radiologist to locate the organ of interest for detailed and focused examination. The MRI/MRCP system also generates 2D and 3D MR angiography (MRA) images of the vascular system, including the arteries, veins, and aneurysms. An aneurysm can be included on a 2D image so that the radiologist can determine the direction of flow of the blood inside the aneurysm. While the MRI/MRCP system generates the imaging data in real-time as the patient is being scanned, the systems also generate a raw data recording of the patient's body for post-processing. At the MRI field strength of 0.5 Tesla (T) (the normal setting for the system) and higher, the images are brightest for structures closest to the imaging system (i.e., the patient). The patients may be

If you have been using PowerPoint 2007 or PowerPoint 2003 with the Windows Presentation Foundation (WPF) technology, you would be familiar with the POPERPoint branding where you'd be able to switch in and out between POPERPoint and Word or PowerPoint. If you've been using PowerPoint 2003 with the Windows Presentation Foundation (WPF) technology, then you would be familiar with the POPERPoint branding where you'd be able to switch in and out between POPERPoint and Word or PowerPoint. When you're saving a PowerPoint presentation (.ppt) file, all the fields in PowerPoint are considered to be read-only and therefore are not available to be customized. Moreover, while in PowerPoint you're able to add your own fonts, and you can import the presentation file into Microsoft Project, you can't export the PowerPoint file to any other format. If you've been a loyal PowerPoint user, you might have found this a little inconvenient. For the purpose of viewing presentations, you're able to export the presentation to any file type with the use of the built-in plugin of the PowerPoint application. However, if you're a frequent business traveler and you need to present the presentation to others in their native format, you will need to convert the PowerPoint file to a format that will allow you to view it. You can do this using a particular viewer. Using a different PC, you may want to convert the PowerPoint file to a format that your own computer can support. You can even use a different web-based viewer. Now, as a PowerPoint user you can now export the presentation to any of these supported format types.
