It remains the industry's standard photo-editing software. Most photo-editing methods lean heavily on Photoshop. So what are the pros and cons of Photoshop, as well as similar, open-source software? I did a little homework before answering. It's a Powerhouse Before we even get into comparing Photoshop to other open-source photo editors, let's start by discussing the power of Photoshop. How does this program stack up against more open-source software such as gimp and inkscape? One of the most powerful features of Photoshop, and a tool that many new users find intimidating, is the ability to go into Object mode. For beginners, this is a mode where you can use the keyboard to select tools or parts of your image and set them to be read by the program. The keyboard is used to move the image, to create layers, and to resize and rotate elements. If you plan on going into most of the advanced editing features, you will find the ability to access and use the keyboard to be a huge time-saver. Object mode is also a great tool when editing text. Often times, it can save a lot of time and hassle by converting logos into paths and then editing them, rather than having to edit directly in text. You can also use a feature called Live Trace to select a point and create a line. Gimp has a robust selection tool, although you will not use Object mode much, as it is oriented toward screen-based editing. Inkscape is another popular open-source image editor. It has a great selection tool as well as a clone tool for copy and paste. This, combined with the ability to work with bitmaps, makes it easy to edit large images. Both Photoshop and Inkscape have robust command-line interfaces. To find them, just type "about" in the user interface and then press enter. Both can use scripts in addition to command-line commands. Pablo Miravet, inkscape's lead developer, says that Inkscape is a "vision of a line-based image editor, targeted to the needs of artists and designers." He wrote this in an email. "We think it's a good tool and we use it ourselves from time to time. And it's the only tool available with the same functionality (selection, export, etc.) as Photoshop." I'm just getting into open-source,

President Rodrigo Duterte has said he will stop attending the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) summit if its members are "still bickering" about human rights amid the bloody war on illegal drugs. In a TV interview yesterday, Duterte said: "With the human rights issue, I said no. If the leaders of Southeast Asia are not prepared to act and to stop killing each other, how can I help them?" ADVERTISEMENT "If they cannot get along, with freedom, then I would not go to the summit," he added. In an interview with Reuters on Friday, Philippine National Police (PNP) Director General Ronald dela Rosa said the Philippine leader would not attend the 12th ASEAN conference and the special ministers' meeting in Singapore next week if there was a "non-cooperation" with the war on drugs. "President Duterte is serious. We are on a war footing. We are attacking illegal drugs more aggressively and more aggressively," Dela Rosa said. The president, who enjoys good ties with US President Donald Trump, is nonetheless deeply suspicious of the US government and its allies. Earlier this year, Duterte accused the US of plotting to overthrow him and of encouraging the insurgency in the southern island of Mindanao. He also expressed disappointment with his British, Australian and other friends for turning their backs on him. In Singapore, the Philippines, Indonesia and Malaysia will be looking to strengthen their ties with China in the face of the escalating row between Pyongyang and Washington. In a speech at the ASEAN conference, Duterte reiterated his anti-China stance and warned that his country would take back territories it has lost in decades of aggression. ADVERTISEMENT "We will take it back. We cannot forgive [China]," he said. "We cannot forget that we were robbed of our patrimony." "Even the previous leader of the country was forced to pay tribute to the Chinese emperor. So, we cannot be taken for granted." On previous occasions, Duterte has threatened to withdraw from ASEAN and has even said the body was a "big hindrance" for the Philippines. But he did not elaborate on what was meant by a "big hindrance" and the latest interview seemed to indicate he was willing to go into the summit if the
