According to The New York Times, House Republicans were ready to pass a bill Tuesday that would shut down the U.S. government if a budget deal wasn't reached. House Speaker John Boehner wouldn't let the deal go until he made sure that Democrats weren't getting something out of it — including some kind of recognition of the humanity of undocumented immigrants, a lasting fix to the Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals program, and a bill protecting against deportation. After a day of negotiations and votes and a sit-down with President Obama, Democrats held firm. On a day of uncertainty, Democrats did their best to give Boehner an ultimatum. A Democratic aide told the New York Times that Boehner “can't have both the shutdown and a deal” — or else. What Boehner couldn't have is more than $40 billion in cuts — and that's what Democrats are willing to give up, knowing they'll have a public-opinion bounce out of it if it happens. (PHOTOS: Rand Paul's Campaign For President) For many of the 11 million people who are undocumented immigrants, this moment — a public standoff, and a massive government shutdown — is the one they've been dreading. All the uncertainty is magnified by the anger in the Latino community — at Democrats, Republicans, Congress, and the White House. “The Latino community is angry at the stupidity of our elected officials,” the New York Times quoted Rep. Luis Gutierrez, a Democrat from Illinois, as saying. The solution is in the best interest of all involved. Democrats are giving in on a shutdown because they're confident they'll get something else. As Roll Call's Jason Torpy reported, “Democrats want stronger protections for the 700,000-plus immigrants known as ‘dreamers’ who were brought to
