Gerard Kennedy has been the minister of state at the Department of Justice since 2011. He was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, and the University of London, and worked in both the solicitors' and accountancy sectors before joining the civil service. He served as an officer in the British Army in Northern Ireland for a number of years before entering politics. His appointment as minister of state was announced at a time when there has been a lot of criticism of the department, particularly following the Shannon extradition case, which saw the extradition of a man to America on charges he didn't even face in Ireland. "I will use my position in this department to tackle the issue of clerical error," Kennedy said. "This issue has become a focal point for all who hold in high esteem the good name of Ireland and who care for the reputation of our great country abroad." The department is currently under the direction of a judicial commission of inquiry into the scandal, and Kennedy said he wanted to ensure that the department responded to any failures to carry out its obligations to the department properly. "I want to be sure that this department is held accountable for its actions," Kennedy said. "My strong preference is that all of our activities, whether ministerial, judicial or otherwise, be fully accounted for and examined as the Department of Justice has been rightly criticised for its conduct in the matter." Kennedy said that from the beginning of his tenure as minister, he has been hearing "unrelenting criticism of the department." He said this criticism should be taken seriously, and that it is an issue that requires a constructive response. "This criticism needs to be addressed," Kennedy said. "I want to put an end to the critical attitudes that persist about the work of the department, and ensure that the department responds positively to the challenges and opportunities that are currently posed by technological advances in the modern world."
