Traditionally, hunting boots with a soft, flexible bottom have been used to provide this comfort. However, soft bottoms are less durable than hard soles, and are not designed for extended walking or jumping over obstacles. Hard soles, on the other hand, are more durable, but provide very little cushioning. In some cases, hunters must wear such shoes even when deer or game are located several hundred feet away. Because there is little cushioning, this can result in an extremely painful "deer-squat" when the hunter makes a sudden movement, such as when running. Also, hard soles typically don't conform to the terrain on which the hunter stands and walk. This can cause the hunter to lose his balance.

From the authors of TimeLog: TraceLog is a program to monitor log files in real time. The log files to be monitored are given by a text file which contains one line per log entry. It is recommended to use the log file extension.trl. This application is simple to use: just launch it, and select the log file to monitor. The list of monitored log entries will be displayed at the bottom of the window. The list is automatically updated in real time. A button is provided to refresh the list, but it can be disabled if you don't want to use it. The position and the size of this button can be changed in the settings. If the list of monitored log entries is too long, you can filter it: if the words of one entry are contained in the search box, this entry will be displayed. The words to be searched can be selected in the search box. The position and the size of the search box can be changed in the settings. To monitor more than one log file, you can use multiple tabs. Each tab represents a separate log file. You can select which log file will be displayed in the tab currently selected in the main window. You can also set the update interval of the list of monitored log entries. TraceLog allows to combine the monitoring of log files with the analysis of log files. It is thus possible to analyze a log file and keep track of the most important events. The time of the last update of the monitored log file is displayed. If you close TraceLog without closing the log files, their time of last modification is shown
