A White House official said the Trump administration "welcomes a resolution" of the Montenegro issue. "The Montenegrin government has long-standing friendly relations with the United States," the official said. "We look forward to working with Montenegro to resolve the matter expeditiously." Marking progress in its European Union membership aspirations, the European Union on Thursday extended its Stabilization and Association Agreement with Montenegro, a landmark accord that was previously due to expire in 2013. The pact provides for political, trade and economic cooperation between the EU and Montenegro and has pushed the country toward membership of the 28-nation bloc. The document that formally established the deal was signed in September 2009 and was extended three times since then — until 2013. The extension was announced by EU First Vice President Frans Timmermans, who said the accord's non-application was preventing Montenegro from joining the EU as planned.
