Novel approaches to cancer immunotherapy (CTX) include the use of tumor-derived autologous dendritic cell (DC) vaccines, immune-stimulating and tumor-specific monoclonal antibodies, T lymphocyte adoptive therapy (CTLA-4, LAG-3), cytokine-producing allogeneic T cells (IL-12, IFN γ), and activated T-cell clones. We review studies using dendritic cell vaccines in this approach. In particular, we focus on our highly successful use of autologous ex vivo generated DC vaccine, in concert with the monoclonal antibodies IL2 and CNTO 144, in the treatment of patients with malignant melanoma. In this autologous tumor immunotherapy (ATI), the use of autologous ex vivo generated CD8-depleted DC and the monoclonal antibodies led to very significant responses in all patients treated. This is the first work that has shown that the induction of a robust antitumor CD8 T cell response was critical to the success of a cancer vaccine. These novel vaccines are generally safe but need to be further developed to improve their efficacy and reduce the risk of off-tumor activity. # Copyright (C) 2013 OpenWrt.org . /lib/functions.sh . /lib/functions/system.sh [-f /etc/config/firmware] &&. /etc/config/firmware # The filename of the configuration file to load CONFIG=$(basename /lib/firmware/.config) load_config $CONFIG if [-e /lib/firmware/.config]; then 570a42141b
