nulsoft installer for keygen dvd creator 9.0Q: ActiveRecord Cursor and ActiveRecord::RecordNotFound I have a situation where I query the database and if the query returns no results, I set an attribute called result, to true. Then I have a view that uses a simple form to display records that have a true result. This works as expected. If it's later necessary to look at that query again, the query can be rerun, but if it returns no results again I want the attribute to be set to true, and for the query to no longer return any records. If it's successfully rerun, that results should be gone. I'm having difficulty knowing when the view is loading its records and setting attribute true. Is there some way I could send a request to the server and request that the attribute be set to true, which would clear the value of the attribute? A: In ruby you can use something like this in your models: after_update :resetting_attributes, :if => :result_not_true? This will check the "result_not_true?" and call "resetting_attributes" if the value is true.
