(CNN) Days after the bombing of a mosque in Christchurch, New Zealand Prime Minister Jacinda Ardern announced an immediate ban on the sale of many semi-automatic weapons in the country. The move was an important move in tackling the issue of gun violence in Australia, where Ardern was born and had lived before moving to New Zealand. It would also mark the first time in New Zealand history that a government had implemented gun control legislation. The change prompted a backlash from gun rights groups -- notably the Shooters and Fishers Party, who have a member of parliament, Grant Robertson, in New Zealand's Parliament. Robertson himself was highly critical of the ban: "The government has adopted an emotive response, but there are still many unanswered questions. How will the state manage the transfer of existing gun stocks?" Robertson said in a statement. Gun violence has seen a rise in the US over the past two decades -- a 20% increase in gun deaths in 2016 and 2017, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. Robertson was also critical of the firearms law in Australia, which was passed in its former self in 1996 in the wake of a mass shooting. "How will the state manage the transfer of existing gun stocks? Will guns simply be banned to millions of owners across the nation who have done nothing wrong? In the US, we import 25,000 guns every single day," he said. Ardern was keen to avoid such arguments, and responded to Robertson by saying: "Surely we can have that debate about gun laws in this country as well." The PM also used her weekly address to tell New Zealanders that the country's identity is being challenged. "Our laws must stand up for every one of us regardless of our race, ethnicity, gender or religion, and our laws must stand up for every part of New Zealand. That is why I am announcing a ban on semiautomatic weapons and assault rifles. We'll come into effect on March 15. The vast majority of semi-automatics were banned in New Zealand in 1989. No guns on our streets, no matter what their history, no matter who holds them." Ardern stated that all semiautomatic weapons will be banned and there will be a two-stage buy-back process for existing weapons, after March 15. "The chief executive of the Weapons Licensing Trust -- the body that manages the issue
