I'm working on some web-based business software, and I have a need to compare two strings for length, and then find out which has the maximum number of letters. (For the sake of this question, say two string lengths are considered equal if they are the same length as each other.) What I'm curious about is whether there is a "simple" way to compare two strings as to their length, using PHP. A: `strlen($str) == (strlen($other_str)) { $max = strlen($str); }` This checks to see if both lengths are equal. North and South Korea began on Wednesday a new round of reconciliation talks, pledging to make more progress next month towards rebuilding a suspended military hotline and improving cooperation in various sectors. Despite the major thaw in inter-Korean relations since last year, the North has demanded a series of steps and conditions before resuming talks on its nuclear programme. Pyongyang's chief nuclear envoy, Kim Myong Gil, told a joint press conference with South Korea's Unification Minister Ryoo Ki Ha, that the South Korean government would be willing to hold new talks, pledging to make more progress next month and tackling three key issues at a meeting next month. He said the North has demanded the North and South bury their differences, resuming the peace negotiation process and establishing a hotline to prevent attacks in areas near the border before resuming the progress in talks. "The government has agreed to hold a fourth round of talks in Pyongyang," Ryoo said. "We will begin three discussions in Pyongyang before the Seoul talks, addressing issues on improving inter
