Scenic Desktop Demo download: Field of the Invention The present invention is directed to methods of forming very small openings in a silicon-containing silicon containing insulation on an integrated circuit (IC). More specifically, the present invention is directed to forming a very small opening through an insulation layer such that the insulation layer is bonded or otherwise attached to a surface of a silicon-containing material. 2. Background of the Invention One of the basic elements of a semiconductor integrated circuit (IC) device is the semiconductor chip, a small square or rectangular block of silicon, with millions of transistors and other circuit elements formed above or below the surface of the silicon chip. A single chip can contain millions of these devices or elements. It is desirable to provide an electrical contact to the circuitry on the surface of the silicon chip, but a common problem associated with making this connection is that the distance between two adjacent circuit elements can be only a few hundred nanometers. The aspect ratio of a hole into which the electrical contact must be made is therefore quite high. For example, for a contact hole aspect ratio of about 5:1, a hole into which electrical contact must be made would need to be about 200 nm in diameter and about 6 microns deep. In fact, aspect ratios of 10:1 or even higher, are common. Thus, for the circuit element
