Scribe

Scribe has been designed for song writers, but can equally be used by lyricists, composers and accompanists. Scribe has the flexibility to hold all song titles, song elements, verses, chords, lyrics, words, sheet music, chord charts, nebulae, and even tune lists. It can hold one or many song titles and track a huge number of things for each song title. When Scribe goes into a song, the itemised song elements go into the Scribe Song Details box at the left of the main screen and are arranged in one of four tabs: Elements, Titles, Songs, Org/Notes.

An example of each of these four tabs is displayed above. The song elements include Title, Key, Lyrics, Sheet Music, Words and Chords (which are displayed as the chord scale in the printable format). Scribe has additional ‘...’ buttons below the tabs to get similar information from all of the element types, which are displayed in the main screen. Three major features are: ‘Lyrics’ tracks the lyrics of a song and the lines of a song, even if they are in a different location to the printed sheet music. ‘Songs’ tracks every song title and stores the additional information at the same time. ‘Chord Name’ tracks all of the chords of a song. ‘Song Key’, tracks all of the keys of a song. Song Key (‘Auto-key’) and Songs (‘Lyrics’ and ‘Chords’) are optional, but an example is shown above, and all of the other element types are tracked by default. Scribe Lyrics

The 'Lyrics' tab tracks all of the lyrics of a song, even if they are in a different location to the printed sheet music. Lyrics can be associated with songs or saved in their own Scribe Song, or saved as a separate Scribe Lyrics file. Lyrics can be associated with as many songs as you like, and all lyrics are kept in one place and associated with different songs. Every time a song is transposed, Scribe Lyrics transposes the lyric with the chord change.

Scribe Lyrics is synchronised with songs, lyrics and chords. Song

It's a song writer/data base tool. It's a very large file manager with a user interface not unlike other file managers. The CDF file format is their internal file format. Scribe supports various file extensions, including ogg, mp3, wma, ipod, wma etc. It's easy to export song titles to various formats, including csv, lyrics, xl sheet etc. The band/artist/title/date/time format is probably the best format of course as it you can export each entry with the band/artist/title/date/time (episodicaly for instance) to the csv format etc. Scribe is also useful if you are looking to have a common source for song titles. For instance, if you are looking to have a master list for song titles, just use scribes database to sync a list of song titles and stick in on your hard drive. This is probably one of the biggest and most useful features of Scribe. This is also a handy cloud sync tool so you can sync the information on several computers via the cloud or the local network, without the hassle of compiling the master database. Another feature is the web interface. It offers a very handy way to create custom searches and importing of song titles from sources of various sorts. It can do SQL based searches and importing of titles from sources such as myspace or tunebase. It's also available via a basic installer as an.EXE file so it's quite easy to install on XP and later operating systems. It's available as a free trial version for 30 days only. The trial version of Scribe is fully functional. Scribe allows a user to create a file with a few thousands songs that will grow considerably if you have enough songs. A database of all songs is created by Scribe, meaning that all song titles are saved in a single database file.

Here are some tips on how to get the most out of Scribe: After installation, create a demo database.

Make a few searches/links/forums etc.

so you can get an idea of the potential of this tool. Once you find the files you need, delete the demo database.

When you edit the database, you have a few options:

select all song titles, sorted by artist or by song title

(both works) select all song titles,
