Primary duodenal adenocarcinoma: an institutional experience. Primary duodenal adenocarcinoma (PA) is a rare epithelial neoplasm. We reviewed our experience in diagnosis and management of PA. From 1979 to 2002, 12 patients with PA were treated at two institutions. Ages ranged from 37 to 70 years, 11 were women, and in one patient, PA arose from a duodenal diverticulum. Patients presented with nonspecific epigastric pain, malaise, and weight loss. Mean tumor size was 3.7 cm. Seven patients had tumors localized to the second part of the duodenum, whereas five and one tumors were in the first and third parts, respectively. Localized tumors were resected by a right duodenotomy, whereas locally advanced tumors in the first and third parts were treated by a pancreatoduodenectomy (PD) and transduodenal tumor resection, respectively. In one patient, a resection of the pancreatic tail was performed because of tumor extension to the pancreatic head. Eight patients (67%) had tumor in metastatic stage. Six patients received adjuvant chemotherapy, five with 5-FU and leucovorin (LV). Tumor recurrence was registered in two patients in the first year. Median survival after PA diagnosis was 15 months. Two patients were lost to follow-up at 1 and 8 years after treatment. The remaining 10 patients are alive with mean follow-up of 10 months. Eight patients (80%) developed recurrent disease. Median survival after recurrence was 4 months. PA rarely arises in patients younger than 40 years. Despite a median tumor size of 4 cm, the lesions are usually found in the second part of the duodenum. Preoperative diagnosis of PA is challenging and frequently leads to inaccurate diagnosis. In a substantial number of PA, the tumor is metastatic at presentation. Patients with PA have a poor prognosis. Overall, 5-FU/LV is the optimal adjuvant chemotherapy.
