SimilarWeb for Opera is a neat extension that gives you a taste of how powerful the SimilarWeb platform is. The service provides analytical data for businesses interested in finding out more about a competitor's website. Information about global rankings, monthly visits, referral sources, demographics, and many more, are just several clicks away. However, for users with no interest in business, the extension can still offer relevant information that one might use to decide if a website is to be trusted or not. What the extension has to offer

The first thing you have to do before starting to use the extension is to make sure you are on a website's page. After that, click the add-on's icon in order to expand the data panel. This panel is limited to details about the site's global, country and category ranking, its number of visitors and demographics, and the traffic sources - a panel that presents, in percentages, the ways users found the site. If you are just curious about a site's reputation or origin, as a casual user, this add-on is enough for you. latest versions of Adobe Acrobat CC 2015 and Adobe Acrobat DC 2015 have introduced a few cool features that make working with PDF files much easier than before. It's now possible to access the complete PDF document without having to open it, edit it and then save it. With the latest versions of Acrobat, you can click directly on a link to access an embedded document. This link won't even appear on the desktop interface. This feature is helpful when you have a whole PDF document open on a tab or a browser window and you want to edit a certain part of it. You can access the modified document directly from the link that appears on the tab where the original file is opened. Simply drag and drop it and it will be added automatically. Once saved, the annotation appears on the PDF page with a different color, by default. In addition, now the PDF forms can be embedded into other documents, and the user can fill them up without leaving the original document. Simply drag the form to the desired location and it will be automatically added, and you can add a new entry by clicking on it.
