Petrarca Francesco Petrarca, also known as Fra Petrarca (c. 1240–1321) was a Roman Catholic cardinal. Biography Petrarca was born in Florence, Italy, the son of Marco Corso, an affluent Tuscan merchant, and of Rinaldo. His mother Rinaldo was the daughter of Guido Adimari. When Pope John XXII visited Bologna on the way to Cagli, Petrarca met the pope and was on very good terms with him. He obtained a letter for his relative and friend, Fra Columbano of Brescia, who was imprisoned at Avignon. A relative of Fra Columbano of Brescia, Fra Michele, later took refuge in the church of San Michele in Florence, where he was admitted to the order of monks, and there he took the name of Fra Michele of Florence. In 1316 Pope John XXII made him a cardinal deacon and sent him as his legate to Florence and other parts of Tuscany. During the French invasions of Italy, Petrarch spent most of his time at Murate. He was on very good terms with the French general, the Duke of Athens, and the French ambassador in Florence, Fra Agnello Gatti. With the latter he prepared a mission to Pope John XXII. In 1316 Cardinal Petrarca joined the First Crusade and went to the Holy Land. After the Crusade, Cardinal Petrarca took part in the Council of Ferrara, which was held to determine the fate of the Greek Empire. There, as one of the more prominent princes, he took a prominent part in the meeting with the Emperor Manuel II Palaeologus. At this time Cardinal Petrarca took part in negotiations for the reunion of the Greek and Latin Churches.
