COLM to LLM User I am in the process of purchasing a Compaq desk top and I wanted to know if IBM and/or Linux support the Compaq Desk Top DSM51-U1 Compaq? Thanks. Martin Saurer Administrator Posts: 1,224 39 posted 9 years ago -->"I am in the process of purchasing a Compaq desk top and I wanted to know if IBM and/or Linux support the Compaq Desk Top DSM51-U1 Compaq?" I suppose you'll have to check the hardware compatibility list again. But my interest is not to support you nor Compaq, but to inform you about some rather unpleasant incompatibility between several office systems and Linux. If you are connecting to some third-party software which expects a Win32 system you may have problems. Put another way, if you are connecting to some software which expects a window system, you won't find much to install and your solution will be to port the software to a window-system compatible replacement. However, if you're using a true Linux system you'll have a working desktop, without any modifications at all. Extension Dazed Posts: 103 62 posted 9 years ago I haven't upgraded to 2.2.9 because there is a bug in 2.2.9 which causes my EXT kernel to appear to crash when trying to read from a USB keyboard. I haven't had the time to debug it yet. I did, however, test the 2.2.7 extension for HID support and there wasn't much difference. Just suring that the mouse/keyboard were plugged into the same controller. I do know that Catfish 2.2.7 doesn't have the Dazed bugs that Catfish 2.2.9 does. Aside from the keyboard issues, the keyboard is working great with 2.2.7. "Jump in, swim hard, and don't worry about the rings."
