Mouse Fix BFBC2 Mouse Fix .Q: C# Multithreaded WebRequest I have a webrequest that is made to a url that requires logging in. The url is I need to make sure that there are no requests going at the same time while the page is loading as this is a thin client (Java) and I don't want to block up the client so it needs to be separate. I've setup up some threads to build the log-in but I'm wondering if I can use them all in one thread to increase efficiency.
I'm using the below code. Is there any way that I can consolidate it down so that I only have 1 thread? private void LogOn() { _logOn.Open("", _port); _logOn.Authenticate("", _username, _password); _logOn.Dispose(); _logOn = null; } private void LogOff() { _logOn.Close(); _logOn = null; } I will be using these in this way: Thread thread = new Thread(new ThreadStart(LogOn)); Thread thread = new Thread(new ThreadStart(LogOff)); thread.Start(); A: It is possible. Create a new thread instance and call the method and then block
