Is it professional to directly quote from previous published work which appears in the library of your institution? A: Yes, it is considered unprofessional to 'lift' content from Wikipedia or elsewhere. If you are quoting only a few sentences, which you did not change or create yourself, it should be fine. But please cite the original sources. A: It can be. I consider it unprofessional to quote without giving proper references. If you don't want it to affect your chances of being hired or employed for your job, I would suggest to remove such quotes if it's the case. Besides, I would also suggest to have some kind of creative commons license, which allows you to share and modify those quotes to suit you better. A: I was quoted an answer to a science related question, and it was incomplete and incorrect. I asked the person who provided the quote what their qualifications were (they were not of the field they were trying to answer the question in) and it came to light that they didn't even have a science degree. I then quoted their answer, and provided the correct answer. Essentially what I was trying to say was, if they don't know the answer to the question, and they are quoting, then the answer you are given is likely to be wrong. However, it is still considered unprofessional to "lift" content, so the one who is quoting the answer will likely have to apologize and cite the sources. in Prov 5:3-4. You can't "put a fence" around Him. He is in every part of our lives. He is "the Lord our God, the Holy One of Israel" (Ps 95:
