Automobile doors generally contain two spaced steel door beams which extend longitudinally along the front edge of the door. Each door beam is attached to and stiffens a metal door panel such that the two door panels can serve as opposed walls for the passenger compartment of the vehicle. The typical door beam is attached to the front face of the door panel by any one of several different techniques. In some installations, screws or bolts are driven through flanged mounting holes located near the outer face of the door beam and are threaded into the door panel. In other installations, flat wall mounting clamps are located between the door beam and the panel for receiving the edge of the door beam. In still other installations, the back of each beam is substantially flush with the front face of the door panel and there is no internal attachment structure, but each beam is supported by a mechanical strut that is attached at the front surface of the door panel. For example, the door beam may be supported by a transversely disposed strut which is attached to the door panel by screws passing through the outer surface of the door panel. The typical door beam is composed of a sturdy web structure and a pair of stiffening ribs which generally extend the length of the door beam and project from the top and bottom of the web structure. In one-piece construction, the web structure and ribs are preferably a single steel casting which is manufactured by dipping a single steel plate in a molten ferrous alloy bath. Such manufacturing techniques permit dimensional accuracy and strength of the resulting beam. The present invention relates to the improvement of the construction of such a door beam and is more particularly directed to the provision of a door beam which is particularly adapted to incorporation into automotive door structures.Mitch McConnell, the Senate majority leader, has warned of "disastrous consequences� v0.0.0 - The Fast Welcome to the Official Score Agnostic (aka 8Bit Fiesta) VFS Log! You can view and play all games currently uploaded to this score agnostic YouTube channel. I will only be uploading new games to the Youtube channel, so uploading.zip files directly to the site is no longer valid. This is still considered the "Official Score Agnostic" Score Agnostic VFS log for all of you. I also need to edit the first episode of the High School Musical game. And now, the games: Newest VFS Log updated: Aug 21, 2016 - Hey guys, I'm here with some support for the single player arcade game 8Bit Fiesta. This game is amazing and I am pretty proud of it, although it has potential. I decided to challenge myself and rewrite the game in Node.js and it seems to be working out. I decided to also add some more original gore, which I'm very proud of. I'm also adding leaderboards to this version to see who is top. Let's get it done: I've been using Node.js for about 2 weeks. I had written my first "hello world" program in as little as 2 hours because there are only so many languages out there. If you would have told me this 2 weeks ago, I would have said yes, "sure". Now, I've built a website from scratch in Node.js, and I've even built a single player maze shooter that is playable in HTML. This is terrifying... and I'm happy about this. EDIT: San Andreas Biblegame by AshBots is here as well: Info: The original game I'm working on is VERY slow. I think the way I'm loading content is lame and I think the downfall of this game. When you press on a menu item, it loads that information and spawns a level. I'm going to start the loads very quick, maybe 50 ms. But I still think the menu code is terrible and is not necessisary. While I'm loading, the menu items still have to be displayed in a usable form. I'm not very good at coding yet, and I have less than a decent understanding of AJAX at all. I'm also still learning Javascript and Node.js syntax. The original game is a prototype and not intended for
