In MoveUp, you control moving blocks as they jet across the sky. Your mission is to stop them precisely on top of one another to stack them. If you do the job well, you are rewarded with another block of the same size. However, if you fail to line up the blocks, the part left outside of the underlying block disappears and the next block you get is smaller. The smaller the blocks, the more challenging it is to stack them. Despite its simplicity, MoveUp can get highly engrossing. Each time a piece of your block disappears and the next blocks get smaller, you become more absorbed since you see the end of the game getting closer. Fortunately, you can gradually grow back your blocks by landing several perfect landings in a row. All in all, MoveUp is an excellent choice for some casual VR gaming, especially after a long day. Fire it up, get stacking, and put reality on the back burner, even if for a few minutes. You will not regret it. Change these to whatever text you prefer when adding to test White Motorcycle This again is the same one I used in the Sign Roadster but this time it will make up for the misstep of being inconsistent on min and maxs. Plays just as vibrantly as the original and still offers the same sleek look. Both of these are not the best versions in my book but they will do the job and give them a try. I am sure they may be improved in some different ways, you also know I am not perfect and I do have a horrible time every once in a while changing headlights. I have written down these directions as well as I do think it is important for all of you to know how to do them yourself. You will need a flashlight. You will need a can of some sort of ether A wide mouth first aid vial or a old eyedropper A half brick A cheque for personal adoration A credit card Follow the instructions. Start at the back of your headlight and work your way up. Make sure the headlight works first otherwise doing your work won't be all that appealing. Funny how that works. I had a neighbor I called the cell phone man and he would come out to the house and fix a bunch of these things in the day. He was basically a traveling handyman but would stop at our house almost daily. He actually took his time to work on the cars for us and one day it was the headlights. It was really nice of him and I took some pictures of him working before he went on his way, so here they are. The cell phone man fixing headlights for Uraz. Me and the cell phone man A couple of the headlights he fixed for us. Once you have your headlight finished remove the clamp using a vise grip (notice I put a picture of it in the vise but you don't need it) and pull off the light on the headlight so you can work on the rear. Remove the screws holding the rear light on. Remove the socket here Remove the screws that hold on the reflector. Pull the reflector up. You should be left with something like this. Reattach the screws you pulled out earlier Reattach this clip Reattach this
