What's new in Crooked Waters:

: HOMECOMING! I am from anywhere. I'm going anywhere. I live the holler and die the holler. I don't care who knows it. -- Andre Ward
Saturday, May 11, 2008 Now For A "Main Event" Variation On My New Internet Game: Story Analysis I started blogging more this year than the past few years of blogging combined, and to date I've posted a total of 513 times. Meanwhile, I continued to do my usual scrapbooking along with doing more graphics (see my Photoshop and illustrator portfolios) and gaming, which is great because it's gotten me into even more online. Before I lay out what I want to post in this blog, I want to play my April Fool's Day joke again on you. The last time I did this, I said i was going to fire my graphic design company. Well, about a month ago, that promise was coming true, especially since the economy was sucking so many businesses dry. As much as I love working on illustration, video, web design and such, a business owner has to realize that with a job like that, you can really only freelance part time, even more so with how much time blogging takes, not to mention the time for doing scrapbooks, titling, and such. Basically, the better I did for clients, the more screwed up my financial situation became. In turn, this affected my working and personal life, and even affected the life of my family, including my parents, who expected a lot from me and were overjoyed to see my first book come out in 2003 (after a first print run of 2000 copies). I actually sold the business to another friend, who's now running a move savvy business out of his home. Having an office had made me into a more serious person, which, in turn, made my mother worry about where I was without a job. My wife Kamiko and I have finally decided to give up that life for the present moment. It's a humbling thought, knowing how you make other people happy by making them feel important, and then you give up such a responsibility. While I know I won't lose all my clients, or that there won't be much monetary gain in doing this, I think what I'll gain in all honesty is some sanity in my life. And you can read all about my graphic design business experience for what I did
