The T cell receptor (TCR) gene complex encodes the transmembrane receptors for antigenic peptides presented by MHC products on the surface of antigen presenting cells. Here, we study the functions of the rearranged TCR genes in both thymocytes and peripheral T cells. We show that the rearranged TCR genes are essential for T cell development and expansion in the thymus. Ablation of the TCR locus in TCR mutant mice resulted in a block in thymocyte development at an early stage of maturation. The number of mature T cells was significantly reduced in TCR(-/-) mice, mainly in the CD4 single positive and CD4/CD8 double positive subsets. The TCR locus was also required for T cell proliferation in response to TCR-dependent and TCR-independent signals. T cells of TCR(-/-) mice were nearly completely deficient in their response to the weak TCR-dependent antigen PHA and the strong TCR-independent stimuli platelet activating factor and anti-CD3 antibody. The TCR gene defect also resulted in altered cell surface markers and the ability of the T cells to respond to major histocompatibility complex (MHC)-restricted stimuli. Taken together, our results indicate that the TCR gene complex is required for the normal development and function of both the thymus and peripheral T cells.Q: If $q \equiv 1 \pmod{p}$ for a prime p , then $q=1$ or $q=p$. How to prove the problem? Can it be proved by contradiction, e.g. if $q \equiv p$ then $q=p$, and if
