Q: Different md5 hashes for same content I have the following code which is part of a user registration page: `$hash = md5(md5(md5(md5("password"). $this->input->post("new_pass"). md5("salt"))));` The md5 function is the same all the way down. There are two hashes calculated, the first contains values like this: `$hash = md5(md5(md5(md5("password"). $this->input->post("new_pass"). md5("salt"))));` The second is: `$hash = md5(md5(md5(md5("password"). $this->input->post("new_pass"). md5("salt"))));` The password, salt and resulting hash are all empty. I went to the site's config/general.php and made sure that the format of `$config['md5_crypt_mode']` is plain, hex. It's: `$config['md5_crypt_mode'] = 'md5';` It's worth noting that this is part of a Laravel project. This is the resultant hashed password being stored in the database, and also, when I connect to the database with my own PHP script it works fine. I can't for the life of me think what's going on here.

A: You are passing the same input to the md5() function.

Q: How to open a new tab in a component that is loaded in iframe I have a component and I don't want the onClick to open a popup window (which is why I used a iframe), but still I want to open the second tab when I click the tab.
