Is the water safe to drink? I am wondering if you would consider writing an article that would indicate just what I should and should not use in my swimming pool. I really enjoy the water and the swimming. Q: Have you ever considered writing an article on swimming pool chemicals. You have done it all before. My swimming pool is heavily chlorinated and I have been using calcium hypochlorite in small quantities to keep the chlorine levels down. Calcium hypochlorite is a great product for the chemicals in swimming pools. In our swimming pool the pH is 6.3 and the level of alkalinity is 12 ppm. I have read that the pH of the water should be 7 or below for you to see signs of algae growth. I have not seen any algae in the past few years. I know of a few backyard pools that have an alkalinity level of 15 to 20 ppm. I could never get them to a pH level of 7. Having said that I do keep the levels of calcium hypochlorite at 20 ppm. I have read that several professional cleaners have come in contact with calcium hypochlorite and died. What do you advise regarding this product? Have you heard of a chemical swimming pool cleaner that would lower the level of chlorine, increase the pH and decrease the alkalinity? I would like to use one of these cleaners to clean my swimming pool. A: By most accounts, the pH of the pool water should be between 7.8 and 7.2, but 7.5 is normal. Any lower and you can expect to see algae or green slime in the water, and any higher than that is considered too alkaline, hence pool water that is 7.8 or higher and lime-based chemicals in it. Chlorine in the pool is necessary for killing algae, which are the primary cause of green slime in pools, but chlorinated pool water can also be toxic to children and pets. Swimmers and lifeguards can get sick and die from too much chlorine. The best solution is
