NEW CITY. THE TOWN. Greet the small and recent city from the sea. Greetings to the white, white towers. It is a cathedral city, huh? It has become a wealthy city, huh? It is built of red stone, huh? The roof is glistening, huh? It is a place where prosperous merchants come, huh? The countless ships are bringing in the sea. This city is a sight to behold, huh? More splendid than any paradise. (Overture) Vikings are frequent visitors here. Vikings sail the seas. Crossing the sea. (Overture) (I) AMINARA [Queen of Port Phlan and Chittira's sister] You only call me here because we are escaping, huh? I will not speak of it. The Eastern Group. (I) CHITTIRA I can never forget that day. The snow fell thickly. The white snow! We headed out from the castle to the sea. I never thought I would see snow again. A thick, thick snow. It clung to the ground. It clung to us. If we didn't leave soon, we would be frozen to death. The cold felt like iron claws ripping into our flesh. Our bodies were stiff from the extreme cold. The heavy, heavy snow. It was as though it was trying to protect us.

1. Field of the Invention The invention relates to a memory controller and a write-in data transfer method. 2.

Description of Related Art

Semiconductor memories such as a static random access memory (SRAM) or a dynamic random access memory (DRAM) generally have one bit line connected to each of a plurality of memory cells included in a row. There is a data write mode for writing write-in data with the memory cells connected to the bit line. Specifically, write-in data is written with the memory cells in a selected row by the memory controller, and the memory cells in that row are turned on. If write-in data is written with the memory cells that are not turned on, write fail occurs and the memory cells are invalidated. In addition, as a result of writing with memory cells that are turned off, the current state of the memory cells is left in the invalidated state. In a typical situation, the memory controller performs control so that write-in data is written with memory cells in the selected row that are turned on. By doing so, the data write mode of the memory controller can reduce the number of invalidated memory cells. However, if the memory cells in the selected row that are turned on are changed by noise before or during writing write-in data, it is hard to prevent write fail from occurring. The foregoing situation is disclosed in Jpn. Pat. Appln. KOKAI Publication No. 2008-205028. Jpn. Pat. Appln. KOKAI Publication No. 2008-205028 discloses a technique for writing write-in data into a memory cell array with a synchronous type memory control circuit. The synchronous type memory control circuit has a data input unit that receives write data, a row address setting unit that sets the row address of the memory cell array, and a write data input end that receives the write data from the data input unit. The synchronous type memory control circuit first performs address decoding, following which write data is written into the memory cell array in response to a row address. In this case, if row data is written with a defective memory cell that does not retain data, no write fail occurs. As the synchronous type memory control circuit has a time margin corresponding to write data, a write operation is performed with noise included. Therefore, a possibility of write fail due to noise is also reduced to some extent. However, since the number of defective memory cells is not reduced, there
