The queen played the Spanish card first, and planned to reignite the war with France that she had already begun. The French, however, would not go quietly into the night. It was too exciting. It ended in a long war. This page covers the war's first and second phases. Even after the English queen had sent a force of some 5,000 troops to the Spanish Netherlands, the first phase of the war was really over by the summer of 1556. Francis II was, as the queen had hoped, too busy fighting against the Ottomans to get into a war with England. The only real issue of the war during the first phase was who would be the next Duke of Parma. Yet, even this minor conflagration was enough to make France ready for war by the autumn of 1556. Elizabeth had made the French very unhappy with her policies toward Spain, and France would have had to consent to the marriage of her heir, Henry II, to Mary's younger daughter, Elizabeth, which the pope insisted upon. France was also deeply offended by the English queen's comments about what a terrible deed it would be to break the treaty of Henry VII and Edward IV. Francis II had also had his brother killed by an assassin (not one of the plotters). But the assassin was still at large, so the king was nervous about starting a war with England. In addition, there were ongoing problems with other parts of Europe.

SlimDrivers and DriverUpdate allow you to remove and -> Q: find the number of answers Given a board of 3*3 squares, each square is numbered 1 to 9. Eight pieces of each color are randomly placed on the board. Each square may be occupied by either Black piece or White piece, the pieces may be on any square, and you are not allowed to use any piece more than once. Find the number of possible configurations of the pieces on the board using the following rules: No Black piece on a White square. A Black piece on a White square indicates a White piece on the opposite square (i.e., opposite corners must have Black and White pieces, and the diagonal of the squares in any row or column must be occupied by a Black piece). There are no pieces on the squares where the numbers 1 and 9 are on the same row or same column. There are no pieces on the squares where the numbers 1 and 9 are on the same row or same column. A Black piece on a Black square may be used to push out other Black pieces. Which is my solution? A: The number of solutions is $\frac{18!}{8!2!8!2!4!2!8!2!} = \frac{18!}{2^6 \cdot 3! \cdot 4! \cdot 2! \cdot 8!^2}$ and the answer key gives \$7774\$. Q: List Not Extending itself Background
