In general, the overall oral health of children and adolescents is improving significantly. The prevalence of caries is found to vary with countries, age, gender and socio-economic group. There are factors associated with caries among preschool children, adolescents and adults. In this paper, attempts have been made to summarize the risk factors associated with caries risk among children and adolescents in Malaysia. The following results were obtained from the review of the related literature. Many factors influence the caries level and the prevalence of caries. These factors are related to the plaque bacteria, environment, diet and oral hygiene. Further clinical trial studies are needed to determine the effect of intervention, such as the use of fluoride, fissure sealant and antibacterial mouthwash. There is a wide variation in the prevalence of caries in developing countries with the highest reported prevalence in India (23%) and China (23%), followed by the Western Pacific Region (19%) while lowest reported rates were reported from Sub-Saharan Africa (12%) and North Africa (7%). Many of the studies that reported data on caries in Malaysia were hospital based while dental examinations were carried out in schools. These studies showed that in Malaysia, the prevalence of caries ranged from 15 to 25%. There are many factors that affect the incidence of caries in developing countries where information about consumption of cariogenic food, bottle feeding, low educational level, the use of antibiotics and the use of non-fluoridated toothpaste were obtained. The socio-economic status also influences the prevalence of caries. Few studies are carried out in Malaysia to identify the risk factors associated with caries among children and adolescents. Among the risk factors for caries, children who consume juices are at a higher risk of developing caries due to the sugars. Several risk factors were identified to be associated with the socio-economic groups of Malaysians which include parents' education, parental e79caf774b
