Explore, collect, analyze and trade. Emotet is a new variant of the infamous "Emotet" banking trojan, which was discovered in 2008 as a threat to the financial system. The threat is designed to steal bank account details and to perform system changes on the infected computer to help criminals with the following tasks: withdraw funds from online bank accounts, transfer money to other accounts, create email spam, and introduce itself as another process. Besides, the threat also enables to block other programs or start a web server on the infected machine. This variant was distributed via a file with the compromised Word document extension and camouflaged with the name "Viktor.doc." The file name contained some additional indications that the threat was installed by the "Viktor" program. Emotet is able to steal the following credentials, depending on the user's settings: Microsoft Outlook contacts, Microsoft Exchange Mailboxes, data associated with the Microsoft Security Account Manager, as well as Windows Live Mail/Hotmail accounts. Besides, the threat also tries to load additional components into the infected process memory. After the successful infection, the threat opens a small window that asks for the payment of the victim's funds. In case the infection is successful, the user will receive a ransom in the form of bitcoins. Remedies: If the infection is detected, you should remove the corresponding files that were probably downloaded by the threat. The threat downloads itself to the memory of the computer, so its complete removal will help you to protect your system from the following threats that may have been installed in the same way. Do not open suspicious documents or emails. Do not go online when your computer is turned on. Do not visit infected web pages or add dangerous programs to your computer. Remove suspicious programs or remove or modify their files. Manage your security settings. Upgrade your browser to a newer version that provides security updates. Do not run applications, files or executables from unknown sources. In case the threat is installed in the system, do not reboot the computer. Do not start the task manager and do not reset the computer, as this may lead to an increase in the threat's activity and may allow the threat to escape. Do not turn off your computer. If the threat makes changes to the computer or starts its own services, a reboot may help to stop the activity of the threat and free your system from the threat. Remove the threat's log files. Use the
