ObjectARX was developed by independent software developer (ISD) Tim Ritson in 1994. ObjectARX is a software development kit (SDK) for AutoCAD versions 2, 3, and 4. In 1995, Tim Ritson created a public key certificate for the ObjectARX object-oriented ARX SDK. This gave the software to the public under an open license. On January 1, 1998, ObjectARX and its development team, consisting of Tony Lohn, Hans Hulst and Tim Ritson, were bought by ADTARX in the US and ADTARX in Germany. Tim Ritson was the VP, Chief Architect and the first employee. During the time of ADTARX ownership, ObjectARX was the basis of the third-party AutoCAD-based applications – e.g. AutoCAD Architecture and AutoCAD Electrical. ObjectARX was and is licensed free of charge to anyone. It is available for Microsoft Windows,

Linux and macOS. The original license included all versions of AutoCAD from 2 to 4, including the latest version "4.5.1". ObjectARX 6 was published in December 2012. A beta version of ObjectARX was released in March 2012. In April 2013

ObjectARX received a Microsoft certification and entered the Beta-stage. This means that ObjectARX will soon be replaced by ObjectARX 6 and will no longer be under the "free" license.

ObjectARX 2 came out in 2002.

ObjectARX 3 was released in 2005.

ObjectARX 4 came out in 2007.

ObjectARX 5 was released in 2011.
