New York City Mayor Bill de Blasio's decision to nominate a former leader of the city's largest police union as the next commissioner of the NYPD sends a powerful message. John Jay College of Criminal Justice professor Glenn S. Porreca, who has been working as a consultant to the de Blasio administration, is the choice to replace Commissioner Bill Bratton, who steps down next month after 12 years in that role. Mr. Porreca, who has a reputation as a reformer of the NYPD, is the architect of the settlement of a civil lawsuit between the NYPD and the family of Amadou Diallo, who was killed during a 1999 incident where a police officer shot him 41 times. The officer who killed Mr. Diallo was eventually charged with manslaughter. His nomination of Mr. Porreca, who was acting commissioner for the past year, comes on the heels of a similar decision by the mayor to nominate a reformer to be police commissioner. The mayor named Mr. Porreca as his choice to succeed Mr. Bratton. Earlier this month, former Queens District Attorney Richard A. Brown, who has been working as a consultant to the de Blasio administration, was nominated to the same post. Both Mr. Porreca and Mr. Brown have vowed to implement sweeping reforms in the nation's largest police force that were first advocated by Mr. Bratton. In the coming weeks, they will be tasked with putting in place reforms that the Police Department agreed to last year in the aftermath of the George Floyd protests, when Mr. Bratton reworked procedures for policing protests to try to ensure fairness and minimize the use of force. In its agreement, the department said it would also revisit and revise a 2009 plan to modernize the NYPD. "The principles of the agreement are going to remain in effect, but the devil is in the details," said John Blake, the chair of the agency's Force Investigation Division, during an Aug. 22, 2019, press conference where he and Police Commissioner James P. O'Neill re-announced the agreement. "We are going to have to spend a lot of time with the city and the mayor e79caf774b
