The above photo, found on the Facebook page of the Parma, Italy, police and the Carabinieri (the Italian equivalent to the FBI), has been shared more than 21,000 times, making it one of the most popular images on the site. The image, posted a week ago, shows a week-old female calzone on a counter in the police station. (The girl's name was later revealed to be Stefania, and there are no pictures available of the "body.") A police officer stands behind the calzone with a sweet expression. According to the FB page, Stefania's parents approached the station with her on April 11, and were told by the Carabinieri police that they "could not do anything to her because she was not human anymore." The caption above the photo says that "non bisogna morderla" translates to "you mustn't bite it." Parma police confirmed to Italian website Nuova Bussiness that Stefania did not have a disease that caused her death, and that they considered the death "caused by an accident while eating." They added that "it is a calzone, the motive for death was asphyxiation." While the text doesn't explicitly mention autism, the general gist of the post is that eating wrapped foods, or "food bolus," could be a hazard for those with autism and other developmental disorders. The Parma police offered a statement about the case on Wednesday.Exploring the Evidence for Gene-Environment Interactions in Maternal Prenatal

Composed of two interweaving tracks - "Neo.Sono" by the piece, and "Neo.Numb" by the score. "Neo.Sono" is a psychedelic dance-hall effect experiment, designed to throw off the musical, mental, and emotional training wheels of the listener. "Neo.Numb" is the older brother of the two, the take on minimalism that people will hear when listening to the debut album. Both tracks are on soundcloud, and both tracks have a running time of approximately 17 minutes. This is a live-looped session, recorded and then mastered in one shot. What's new in Time Fragments: 24h In Capua:

1962 Precious antiquities are exhibited at the Life and Culture Museum of Selve of the comune of Capua. But where are they hidden? The shocking video above presents a few details about the Mafia organization that was moved during '62 from Apulia to Calabria as part of the "operations of 'military' government imposed on the region during the years of siege that ended the glorious insurrection" [7]. In September of '62 the members of the Mafia known as "Cirillo" were arrested in the village of Selve of the comune of Capua because they were allegedly infiltrating the army and mistreating the prisoners with armed violence. They didn't mean that: took advantage of the atmosphere of hate towards the Germans and were still supporting the "Garibaldi Battalion"...apparently with their "exchanging pistols for spare tires and bricks" even a century after the events. As it happened, a policeman noticed them and called the Carabinieri "who quickly came and arrested them" and "from there the Cersi were transferred with great mobility to the region of Cassino and from there they were made prisoners of a punitive group of executioners". In May of '62 an oppressive military regime came to power in Calabria. The Capua police seized all the members of the Cersi who were in their territory. It was May 22nd: the first operation took place on May 25th in Selve: "47 Cersi were taken to Castel di Luca and at that same time 53 in Pollina. Some others were executed in Erice." They were at least 15 of them, "the same evening after the operation in Selve that in Capua: in Gaeta (Crotone) and Saline; in Modugno and Sulmona and of course at several locations in the Sicilian province of Palermo." An almost Red-led offensive with the support of the partisan-faction in Cassino. They especially targeted the people that fought with the Garibaldi Battalion. And so the Mafia infiltrated the army: "Oskar Festetics" arrested in Capua as a Garibaldian partisan, some Cers
