FIFA 20 introduced “Nearby Players,” which used crowd and crowd sensing technology to create a virtual ballistics map of the real world, enabling players to read the ball path and anticipate future opponent moves. This artificial intelligence-driven system was used to predict and monitor player movements and execute precise passes and long-range shots across all game distances and speeds.

It also influenced ball physics and ball movement. FIFA 21 introduced “Camera Control,” the deceptively simple ability for players to manipulate the ball with handcrafted features. “Camera Control” enabled players to optically see the ball’s trajectory, pitch rotation and the trajectory of any user-created artificial intelligence. This new ball trajectory system allowed players to make small tweaks to its movements using only the right stick, using a virtual hand to twist the ball, or perform small-scale assists. FIFA 20 introduced “Control Activation,” which first appeared in Rugby 15 as “Zoom Activation,” the ability to zoom into the match to a high level of detail. “Control Activation” was activated by pressing the right bumper during gameplay, with the choice of a zoom level from 0-2 on FIFA 17 and 0-4 on FIFA 19. FIFA 20 introduced “Movement Speed,” which gave players the ability to manually increase the overall speed of the ball. Players could increase the speed of both the pass and shot by bumping the right bumper and left bumper, respectively, while maintaining a consistent overall speed. This allowed teams to create passing styles that were not possible before. For example, Zidane’s ability to outpace his opponent by accelerating the pass after playing it, or the way that Ronaldinho could scoot past an opponent using a carefully placed ricochet pass. FIFA 20 introduced “Long Shots,” which enabled long-range shots to be influenced by the spin direction of the ball in FIFA 17 and the PitchTec system in FIFA 19. This was done by tilting the right analog stick to the side and then pressing the left trigger. This created perfect shots that would ricochet off the back of the opposing team. The long shot model used in FIFA 20 was added to FIFA 19 in a new shareware update, which was later released as an official update. These new game elements helped drive a new approach to FIFA’s signature “Moment of Magic”
