Pulmonary vasodilatation and hypoxia-induced pulmonary hypertension. Pulmonary vasodilatation in man is mediated by relaxation of vascular smooth muscle. Relaxation may be mediated by release of the endothelium-derived relaxing factor or by activation of potassium channels; it also may be mediated by release of endothelium-derived contracting factors. The pulmonary circulation cannot dilate as easily as the systemic circulation because of the presence of lung musculature. Hypoxia and hypercapnia are said to cause pulmonary vasodilatation by increasing adenosine triphosphate. The effects of hypoxia and hypercapnia on the resistance of the pulmonary circulation to pressure and flow are thought to be mediated by increases in intracellular adenosine triphosphate, which potentiate calcium influx through dihydropyridine-sensitive calcium channels in the smooth muscle of small pulmonary arteries and veins.Q: Why do I have to paste the printout of figure in my question? Recently, I posted this question. In my question, I put in my code as a figure. The post is still in review, and I got this message: "This post can be marked as spam or offensive if it doesn't add anything to the discussion." The message appears at the beginning, on the left side. It appears that all my questions are like this, they appear like a little quiz. One of the questions is: Figure 1 is related to Figure 2. Why don't you show Figure 1 as well? What do I do? When I am writing, it gives me a space between each word. How can I avoid this? A: When you paste a print of a figure, it's fine to leave a space between the lines. Just make sure to do it for only one line. Since it looks like there may be some confusion, here's a screenshot showing it. I've left a space between the two lines. You don't have to add in the figure number when adding a figure to a post. The system will automatically do it for you. Just check here to confirm that: The post would have been auto-numbered as "1." Or if you have [b]Figure 2[/b] it would automatically become "2." And if you have [b]Figure 1 (2),[/b] it would automatically
