Plus, get unlimited free software discounts, product upgrades, added features,.I used a Macbook as a developer before. My current project mainly is all a.NET 4.5.1 ASP.NET Web forms project that I develop on Windows 7 Professional (might be relevant because if it is I might end up re-install it). Web forms is one of my development favorites because in general it is nice to work with and since most of the stuff I do are either just a page navigation or basic form validation then I can leverage a lot of .NET and windows forms stuff in a good and clean manner. My only gripe with web forms is that it can be quite painful to maintain your project if you need to change the UI quite often but if you don't change the UI that often then development goes quite smooth. I am looking into replacing it with ASP.NET MVC because I find the separation to be a better separation of concerns, but still there are many things it's just easier to do in Web Forms than it is with MVC. Also, there is not just one asp.net mvc but different versions out there and some have the same names as the versions of web forms. This might cause a confusing workflow sometimes.
