Thursday, 2 February 2010 After a short break, I have finally got to the back of the Sizzix strips I bought. It has been a long time since I bought dies! I have glued and made the tag using the Doodler Designs Sherbet Set - using the strips and outlining the tag before mounting onto lime coloured card. These tags were inspired by the chapter covers for The Winds of Winter and Game of Thrones. I do like the look of those, but since I am still reading the books by George R.R. Martin, I still have a few months to go until I get to this book and have to make these, until then, they are the 1st of their kind in the house, with the A Song of Ice and Fire book covers. Tuesday, 16 January 2010 Recently brought a brand new Silhouette CAMEO 3D to try out, but haven't had much time to play with it, however, I did get chance to doodle in the scrapping area, deciding how I was going to use the Silhouette. I made the border on the Cookie Cutter Baby, as I have wanted to make something using this, should be nice to finally do something with it (then again, I will never use it for something else). Saturday, 13 January 2010 Ahhh, finally made it to the clothes line. It's a great new exercise in sewing. Yes, I know, I am not supposed to make clothes, but I am not a fashion designer and I am also not a clothes store, so was not expecting to find much. Anyway, I have progressed far enough to actually use the material. I have used a template in Power Point to make the text on these shirts. I go through stages of sewing and then purchasing the needed material. This usually means T-shirts at the moment. The final one won't fit, I will only use this to decorate with stamps in Check out the gameplay video (Tomato Jones The Movie) I've taken a lot of inspiration from the second part of the movies (Indiana Jones and the Temple of Doom. but I've changed a lot of things around to make this game simpler and more intuitive. No time travel. you can't control anything but the character himself as a vehicle. Drive while you walk. There are no special jumps like in the fourth movie or a double jump, but you can jump using double jumps or while rolling.tilt the screen, so you keep climbing and running. You can jump on ketchup bottles. They are the only enemies that do nothing. If you jump on the walls, you can jump diagonally and if you are moving then you will keep going in the direction you were moving, much like in the "Walking Dead". There's a boss at the end of each level. You have to get the treasure or kill the boss before you can proceed. You won't know what the boss looks like until you find it. You don't have to look at the ladders, wall switches and levers. You also don't need to look for the path blocks or the switches that open the gate to the next level. If you look at the floor and you go right, you'll find what you need right under your feet. SOME GAMES THAT I MADE: A TRAINER A SUGARY FIELD FOR YOUR CHARACTERS This game is a sequel of a game I've made called "Tomato Jones Treasure Hunter". It is also a 2D top-down game with platforming, ball rolling and jumping puzzles. : The Ultimate Baby (Treatments, Toys & Tips) In Japan, parents can nominate a baby for 'Day for a Kitten' (Kitten Day) by paying 25,000 yen (approx £200) for a Japanese cat. Adoption centres across Japan look after cats with names starting with: Haru, Nishino, Minato, Urayasu, Yoshino and Masu. After the baby is adopted, it is paid 100,000 yen (approx £800) by the adoption centre. The adoption centre holds an event for the babies, where it gives them a special name and have their ears, paws and tail trimmed. Researcher Masayuki Fukushima has worked at one adoption centre and researched how many cats manage to get home. When asked if he has any feline friends, Fukushima said: 'I have not had any. 'My mother used to feed two stray cats who were hungry and friendless, but she wouldn't bring them home as they were too demanding.' Masayuki Fukushima But Fukushima admits he loves cats when he lived at home and said: 'I used to put out bread and bowls for the stray cats.' According to the Japan Times, statistics show that 30,000 kittens were adopted each year and some parents had a change of heart before signing the papers. It is unlikely that Japanese people will be adopting kittens outside Japan or charity animals adoptions in the UK. But there are things that you can do to pamper your cat. This list will cover toys, treats and tips to make life better for your pet. I recommend buying toys that contain the following: 1. Exercise 2. Eucalyptus oil 3. Grapefruit 4. Vegetable oil 5. Baby food 6. Adult food 7. Essential oils 8. Fish oil 9. Kitten formula 10. Vitamins

1. Exercise Dogs have exercises such as running laps, play chase and retrieve games. Cats benefit from walking, scratching and chasing their toys. Some cats also need to climb as they like to get their toes and claws involved. Each cat is different and you need to ask your vet before you commence your exercises. 2
