After being forced to re-sign Josh Smith before the season started, Devin Harris suffered a left MCL sprain which will require surgery and keep him out until at least February. Now, in a season in which the Hawks are expected to contend for a division title, with the New Orleans Hornets in a similar situation, the team may be forced to use a combination of two small forward and three point guards. According to CSNNE's Steve Bulpett, the Hawks will use a combination of DeMarre Carroll, Al Horford, and Lou Williams during Harris' absence. For now, Dwight Howard will stay with the team as the starting center because of his contract extension. A lot will depend on the health of both Harris and Howard as the team will have to choose between, either playing Howard at the center spot, or keeping the injured Harris on the floor by playing

Howard at power forward. Regardless of how the team will play, it will be difficult to maintain the same winning record with only four players in the lineup.

In welterweight action, Bader notched a third-round TKO over Theismann to become the WBC World Welterweight champion. Bader was 1-3-1 with 1 No-Decision against the champ, a TKO win at the end of the first round. Bader's only win over a World champ. In the rematch with Tommy Theismann, the champ again prevailed, this time by unanimous decision to defend his title for the first and only time, showing one round of TKO power. The fight was considered a major upset in a series of one-sided fights. Anderson's only previous loss was a split decision in a title eliminator for the WBC crown. In a rematch the following year, Anderson won a dominant eleven round decision in what was then considered the fight of the year. Saturday, February 17, 2018. One of the more remarkable results of this year's Oscar race was the inclusion of the small but potent drama The Shape of Water, from writer/director Guillermo del Toro. Adapted from a short story by Charles L. Fort, the film chronicles the relationship between a mute janitor (played by Sally Hawkins) and a mysterious amphibian-like creature who helps the man break his isolation. The resulting love-hate relationship with the being gives the film a mix of near-silent mystery and out-and-out comedy, with playful interplay from stars Michael Shannon, Doug Jones, Octavia Spencer, and Richard Jenkins. The Shape of Water premiered on the final night of the 2017 festival and won four Oscars, including Best Picture, Director, Adapted Screenplay and Best Actor for Mark Ruffalo as an injured underground union activist. Its critical acclaim surprised many. Del Toro's previous film, 2002's Don't Be Afraid of the Dark, was largely ignored, but here he made a sumptuous fairy-tale tale, and his return to a genre that has disappointed him in the past. He's made other genre films -- Pan's Labyrinth, Mimic, Hellboy and The Devil's Backbone, the latter of which won the Special Achievement award in 2010 -- but he returns to his roots with The Shape of Water. The film was inspired by a short story by author Charles L. Fort, who in the 1920s documented cases of people who claimed to have been abducted by aliens. The story took on a different resonance in 2002, when

Alimentary Reserves, Food Crops in Australia By C. W. Bowman Abstract The average Australian has two tonnes of cereals, 0.6 tonnes of tuber and fibre crops, and 7.8 tonnes of foodcrops, including rice, wheat, potato, sugar, pulses and vegetables. The most important foodcrops are wheat, rice, and potato, the three cereals of economic importance, and potatoes, which make up about the half of the foodcrops. Wheat, rice and potato are grown in about one tenth of the country for home consumption, and about one tenth for commercial consumption. The other foodcrops grow in one quarter of the country and are used largely for commercial consumption. Potato grows easily and abundantly and is of great economic importance. Maize is also grown in Australia and is about the same economic importance as corn in North America. From the above it is clear that Australia can be self-sustaining in cereals and foodcrops, but it cannot without intervention derive sufficient quantities of sugar and fats to meet demand. Sugar would be produced either from the importation of cane or from the cultivation of sugar cane, but this country has no strategic need for cane products. Sugar could be derived from the importation of palm oil, but it would be expensive and not suited for Australian conditions. The planting of edible oils would be of little use in the northern part of the country. The coconut is an important foodcrop in the far North Queensland region, but it is not economically feasible to import it. Expenditure on foodcrops could be continued without affect on the economy if importation could be made consistent with the increase in food supply. On the other hand, it is evident that if Australia were to continue, or increase, its consumptions of cereals, foodcrops, fats and oils, it would have to import progressively these commodities. The question is what imports should be substituted for these goods.

Edmonton, Alberta - On Monday, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation posted a news release stating that an anti-abortion extremist known for an arsenal of bomb-making materials was arrested on June 19th in Calgary, Alberta. A Calgary Police Service media spokesperson, on being emailed by LifeSiteNews, confirmed to our reporter that the arrest had taken place, and that "the accused was arrested at a residence in the 100 block
