This special feature will also be available on FIFA 17 on PlayStation 4, Xbox One, and PC. In the video below, Team EMEA Sport Lead Content Developer Matt Kidd explains the new game engine and how it will improve the realism of the new generation of FIFA games:

“FIFA 22 goes to the next level in game quality by adding new technology called 'HyperMotion Technology' to the game engine,” says Matt Kidd, Senior Gameplay Engineer at EA SPORTS. “For the first time, a real football match was filmed by 22 members of the world-renowned Real Madrid Football Club in motion capture suits.” The footage captured is now the base of a technology which FIFA 22 is exploiting to enable a brand new level of video game realism. The result of a 7-year journey to improve the game, this system was developed in two key areas – Physics, and Animation.

Physics The combination of the Motion-Capture data and user interaction by voice or control pad together with the newly developed EGL 7.0 engine gives us the possibility to create more convincing animations. So when we think about the football players running and moving around, we can now see their hair flying around in the air, or their boots or legs each flipping back and forth. We now have the tools to create these in-game animations for the first time in the history of FIFA video games. ”

Animation The latest version of the EGL 7.0 engine is used to animate the crowd, players, sidelines and the ground of the video game. The crowd system provides the “football environment” – from a unique perspective, it describes the game in more detail to the player. “We have now developed and improved a crowd model which was already mentioned in previous versions. Together with the FIFA 22 engine, the crowd is now intelligent. It reacts to player animations, for example, when a player receives the ball and scores a goal the crowd roars, applauds and reacts to the achievement.”

The latest version of the EGL 7.0 engine, the animation system with more than 100 bones, supports new features such as bone deformation, which means that players can now bend and crouch like real football players. This means that even the most spectacular moves in game can be made by creating the precise animations. “It is important to realise that we are
