Cardiac rehabilitation for chronic heart failure in the community: results of a randomized controlled trial. To evaluate the effects of a 2-month cardiac rehabilitation programme for patients with chronic heart failure on exercise performance, health-related quality of life, symptoms, and physical capacity after 6 and 12 months. Patients with chronic heart failure are at increased risk of recurrent events. The inclusion of exercise training during rehabilitation has been shown to improve exercise performance and decrease recurrent cardiac events. A multicenter randomized controlled trial. 101 patients were included in a rehabilitation group and 99 patients in a control group. Patients were consecutively recruited from four Danish hospitals. The intervention consisted of a 2-month rehabilitation programme (seven sessions of physical training over 4 weeks) with education, diet and individualized exercise testing, followed by discharge to their usual community-based rehabilitation programme. After 6 and 12 months, the exercise test was repeated, the health-related quality of life was measured using the Short Form 36 (SF-36), and the Minnesota Living with Heart Failure Questionnaire (MLHFQ) was used to measure the symptoms and the physical capacity. The intervention showed a benefit on exercise performance 6 and 12 months after the completion of the programme. This was reflected in an increased oxygen consumption (by 1.2 1 mL kg(-1) minute(-1) (p = 0.02) at 6 months and 1.2 1 mL kg(-1) minute(-1) (p
