The recruitment of ICAM-1 from the monocyte to the platelet in stimulated platelets in an in vitro perfusion chamber. Recruitment of membrane-expressed adhesion molecules from monocytes to platelets is a critical step in platelet aggregation, which is important for thrombosis and hemostasis. Recently, we demonstrated that platelet cyclic AMP (cAMP) was involved in platelet-monocyte interaction. However, the mechanism of recruitment of adhesion molecules from monocytes to platelets remains unknown. In this study, we employed an in vitro perfusion chamber that allowed for rapid and continuous monitoring of platelet-monocyte interactions. We found that human platelets and macrophages recruited ICAM-1 from each other under flow conditions. The addition of PGI₂ induced cAMP in the platelets and macrophages, which increased the recruitment of ICAM-1. In contrast, monocyte-platelet interaction, especially recruitment of ICAM-1, was decreased under flow conditions in both bovine and human platelets. These results suggest that monocyte-platelet interactions are triggered by platelet cAMP, which is important in the recruitment of adhesion molecules.
