Has anyone else had this problem? Been playing since it was released? No epic quests, No dragon fights, no dragon in the beginning? I played through the first game, loved it, and thought the sequel sounded interesting enough to buy a ps3 controller and get it. Got it for a good price and it was pretty good for the first couple of hours. As with any ps3 game, the first 1-3 hours always gets me hooked on a game so I wanted to see if it lived up to those first few hours... It still holds up well, but there's other games out there that have the same feeling. The magic system is great, and the "Rivalry" system is awesome but if you want really smooth gameplay, I would definitely steer clear of it. The real reason there's no epic quests or dragon fights is because it was made to be played cooperatively. If you want a single player game you're SOL. (Well, maybe if you could create your

Why Team TARNISHED?

A great co-op RPG needs great English voice cast talent. We are looking for talented voice actors who would fit the characters of the main heroes, specifically the casts of Final Fantasy and Dragon Quest.

Please help out with the characters for a little while by joining our Discord server or helping out in the Team TARNISHED channel on Thursday after 12:00 p.m. (Tokyo time) each week. If you aren't interested in voicing any characters or just want to listen and learn the voice lines, we are happy to provide that for free as well!

The Australian Federal Police have been ordered by the government to block websites and social media accounts that are used to promote encryption technology. The order was given on Tuesday, the day after a Senate committee called for the government to consider establishing a nationwide technical capability notice scheme, which would require telcos and internet service providers to assist the government in secretly turning over Australians' data. In a letter to the Australian Federal Police, Communications Minister Mitch Fifield said the "technological measures" would be consistent with the government's policy on the interception of electronic communication. "The measures would be used where there is evidence of a breach of the law, but the communications industry could not reasonably be expected to help the Commonwealth to obtain the information to prove it. "The measures would be undertaken with the support of all telecommunications companies, with the role of the Attorney-General and Communications Minister playing a coordinating role to ensure accountability." The government has not yet released the details of the technical measures. However, it is understood they have the power to force the telcos to hand over the data, without court approval. "This would be the first time that the government has sought to 'turn off the tap', rather than 'turn on the tap'," Greens senator Scott Ludlam told the committee. "This is a draconian move, and it is indicative of the capture of our government by the security apparatuses." He noted the government was moving to address the encryption issue before the Intelligence Committee in the wake of the foreign interference allegations against the Chinese telecommunications giant Huawei. "This is an extraordinary moment where the government is considering some of the most disruptive, even draconian, measures ever contemplated against the Australian people to access their data," he said. "There are precedents for it elsewhere, but this is the first time we've had a moment of crisis where the government has faced
