Q: Convert Stored procedure with multi SELECTs using Dapper I have a SQL table with the following layout: CREATE TABLE [dbo].[scms]([SCM_Id] [int] IDENTITY(1,1) NOT NULL, [Parent_Id] [int] NOT NULL, [SCM_Name] varchar NOT NULL, [SCM_Desc] varchar NOT NULL, [SCM_Date] [date] NOT NULL, [SCM_User] varchar NOT NULL, [SCM_User_Name] varchar NOT NULL, [SCM_Created_By] varchar NOT NULL, [SCM_Created_Date] [date] NOT NULL, [SCM_Modified_By] varchar NOT NULL, [SCM_Modified_Date] [date] NOT NULL, [SCM_Status] varchar NOT NULL, [SCM_Status_Notes] varchar NOT NULL, [Foreign Key([Parent_Id]) References [dbo].scms On Delete Set Null, CONSTRAINT [PK_scms] PRIMARY KEY CLUSTERED ([SCM_Id] ASC)) ON [PRIMARY] I am using Dapper to get data from it, and it's working fine for me. I want to modify the SQL so I can include the Created_By and Modified_By columns as properties of my entity objects. I'm trying the following, which works fine, except that the columns added by Dapper get added to the objects as null rather than my user names. RETURN VALUES(scms).Select("User_Name = UserName()", "

However, adequate serum levels are not the only determinant of sperm production. Age is the most important factor determining the status of germ cells. The period from birth to 1 yr of age is the most critical in male reproductive function. The pathogenesis of cryptorchidism, anorchia, and testicular dysgenesis is also dependent on a physiologic sequence of events. Normal spermatogenesis requires a synchronous sequence of mitotic, meiotic, and biochemical events in the spermatogonia, spermatocytes, and spermatids. Unlike normal function, altered patterns of germ cell proliferation and differentiation can lead to infertility. Animal studies have demonstrated that the basic events in spermatogenesis are genetically controlled. In this proposal, the hormone stimulated germ cell maturation and differentiation will be studied in vitro. Key experiments will be done in both testicular and epididymal organ cultures. This culture system offers a unique opportunity to study the effects of hormones on germ cells before the mitotic cycle begins. The proposed work will attempt to clarify the hormonal control of meiotic maturation and of the biochemical events of germ cell differentiation and maturation, thus providing insight into the pathogenesis of cryptorchidism, anorchia, and testicular dysgenesis. By understanding the basic control mechanisms of germ cell proliferation and differentiation, future studies can take advantage of this unique culture system to investigate the effects of hormones on germ cells, and to develop effective therapies for infertility. The studies proposed also e79caf774b study was conducted of the recombinant retrovirus-mediated transfer of neomycin-resistance gene into blood lymphocytes and bone marrow fibroblasts from 6 patients with multiple myeloma. The results demonstrate the possible usage of recombinant retroviruses for introduction of the transgene into blood cells, accompanied by the ability to prevent clonal proliferations in patients with multiple myeloma.Q: Re-evaluating the hierarchy of objects being saved to my database I am updating a rather large set of classes that save objects to a database. Since I have never designed a DB for real, I want to make sure that I have not left any things out, or am introducing new problems. So I have created a simple hierarchy of objects being stored, how do I re-evaluate this hierarchy? Product Product has all the same properties of it's parent class, but a property of type List that connects all the Products together. Customer Customer has all the same properties of it's parent class, but a property of type List that connects all the customers together. Supplier Supplier has all the same properties of it's parent class, but a property of type List that connects all the suppliers together. My Question Does my hierarchy look correct or have I made any mistakes? A: My experience with a large number of DB tables with relationships is that everything works fine as long as you have 1 DB table per entity, and the key of that table is defined for inheritance (ie. Id, Id). If you have 2 tables that share the same key (ie. no unique constraint), you run into problems. You can share models across databases, and it will just work as long as you have all your data in the DB. However, when you are using 1 DB for all data, this choice becomes critical. Consider using the Inheritance Strategy suggested in this answer. And since you're using EntityFramework, if you want to
