wondering why htmlspecialchars() works and even seems to produce a cleaner html version of the string given an input of while esc_html() doesn't? I've successfully used htmlspecialchars on a published string - all the html has been converted back into <BR>. Examples below (taken from Firebug): htmlspecialchars():

 esc_html():

 I'm using WordPress + MAMP and I'm using the standard PHP configuration (using the built in engine). My example string is a post title, "Click me". A: The problem is that the functions esc_html() and htmlspecialchars() are not equivalent. The second one allows you to go further than the first one (for instance, some browsers will understand <BR>). If you want a simple solution, you can use the filter esc_attr, which is equivalent to esc_html(), or esc_html_e(). The report, released Wednesday, tracked more than 250,000 babies born in 2005, the last year for which CDC data are available. Home births accounted for 9.3 percent of U.S. births, up from 3.4 percent in 1980. If the increase in home births continues at the current rate, 30 percent of U.S. births will occur in the home by 2010, the report says. Sellier Homebirth and a friend's home birth were among the reasons the CDC report listed as reasons for the increase in home births. "Many women choose home births for good reasons -- because of a home-based job or a lack of access to a hospital or because of cultural or religious beliefs," Dr. John Edmondson, the report's lead author, said in a statement. "By increasing access to home birth, it may increase the overall number of home births. However, in our analysis, no subgroup has an increased risk of adverse pregnancy outcomes in a home birth compared to hospital birth." The study found almost 4.6 percent of U.S. babies who were born in hospitals had a low birth weight, which is one of several risks associated with pre-term birth. The report also found increased rates of premature births and pre-term premature births among black babies born in hospitals. There was no increased risk of death among babies of all racial groups in a home birth.Q: How to store an html file and read it in python? this is my html file from which I have to extract some information in python
