Locus* families ----- A new analysis tool has been developed that will allow users to examine more than 50,000 loci from the literature in relation to their genotype and phenotype. The tool is composed of the following components: 1. A Graphical User interface (GUI) to demonstrate how to upload the data into the "browser", and link genotypes, phenotypes, and genotypes with phenotypes. 2. A Web Server to accept user submitted data and give the user the option to retrieve loci on the fly (in addition to saving loci on the server for later analysis). 3. An Analysis Tool that provides a summarized and ranked results report. We designed the "Locus" analysis tool to be easy to use, allowing for a straightforward workflow for identifying loci of interest. The tool provides a user-friendly interface to upload data that is standardized to fit into the "Browser" in a format that can be used for statistical analysis. The GUI allows users to quickly link phenotypic and genotypic data and associate them (Figure 1)[#F1]{ref-type="fig"}). After phenotypic information has been uploaded, the "Browser" allows the user to select any of the available genotypic markers through a tag or an exact locus name. The tag option allows a user to quickly select a tag or a primer set for a locus. Selecting a locus name allows one to load genomic information for that locus in the form of a gene name, chromosomal location, and a list of either a genetic map or a sequence in BED format. This tool allows a user to quickly process the large volume of genotype and phenotype data, and associate that data with a phenotype. After the data has been Numerous studies investigated the effects of crossbite on the permanent dentition; however, no research has been performed on deciduous teeth in this respect. The aim of this study was to assess deciduous dental changes in the primary dentition of children with crossbite. For this reason, deciduous dental casts of children were assessed based on the crossbite status of their permanent dentition. One hundred and twenty dental casts of 30 untreated children were retrospectively examined and classified as crossbite (n=60) and no crossbite (n=60) using the United States Public Health Service (USPHS) grading system. The data were statistically analysed using the Chi-square and Mann-Whitney U tests. More severe crossbite was observed in the upper posterior region of primary molars in children with crossbite (pA generation of flying fanatics got its first chance to fly their jet aircraft in a simulator at a Seattle-area airport Wednesday. The free Wednesday flight event in the air at Sea-Tac was part of a new program that teaches jet pilots how to fly the new experimental Seattle-Boundary Bay Fighter. It's a jet designed to be operated from a lakeside runway in SeaTac, one of three versions of the F-35 that have been tested at the 50
